Traditional content search capabilities are built into Windows. They use a variety of criteria to find specific content in any file. This includes Windows search, Windows Live Search and the Windows Indexing Service. You can get this kind of search capability by enabling web crawling in Windows. The Windows Search web service uses a variety of crawler agents to collect and index documents. It includes web crawling to find documents on the web as well as crawling the Internet Explorer and Firefox browsers. You can also have crawler agents search other file types such as text documents, multimedia files, PDF, and so on. The Windows Indexing Service provides similar capabilities to web search. It is the web service used by the search capabilities in Windows. The Office SharePoint Server 2007 f988f36e3a
